

Merry Christmas 2007

This past year we celebrated our 25th wedding anniversary. Despite our mistakes, Katelyn and Taylor are maturing into wonderful adults.

Katelyn celebrated her 21st birthday this past May skydiving with close friends. She is enjoying her first year of medical school about 4 hours from Cincinnati at Northeastern Ohio Universities College of Medicine. She continues to excel academically, is passionate about medicine and is already working with doctors and patients. Her apartment is comfortable with two quiet roommates and well suited for studying. She comes home to Cincinnati regularly, although we suspect her boyfriend Alex could be the reason? 😊

Taylor, now 18, is quite independent and seems ready to move on to college -- which will be a natural move for him. Still, he is making the most of his senior year at Lakota East high school and is always busy with friends, school activities and is looking forward to his rugby team in the spring. Taylor also hosts a Christian Young Life group with 30+ high school students every Monday night. They started the year with a 'large' kickoff bonfire party in our backyard.

We enjoyed a Easter vacation visiting Mom and Dad Howard at their winter condominium in Delray Beach Florida. The six of us enjoyed the time on the beach with the relaxing sounds of the surf. In July, all the Corbetts celebrated Mom and Dad Corbett's 50th Anniversary by surprising them with a long weekend on Kelleys Island. We stayed at a bed and breakfast, bicycled around the quaint island and sailed on Lake Erie. We were fortunate to have this time with both families.

As we think about Christmas and the birth of Christ ...

"We do not cast our anchor on anything within ourselves. We seek our security neither in feelings nor experiences. Our anchor is fastened to Christ, who is within the Holy of Holies where He resides now that His birth, death and resurrection bought our salvation."

Wishing you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Always with love,
Brenda, Rich, Katelyn and Taylor
